a delicious hint

that comes with

COKE used to be the despised fuel, the alternative for those who could not afford the best coal. Now it is the smart fuel, because it is smokeless, and industry and housewives have been encouraged to use it to keep the soot out of the air. So coke, which was practically given away before the war—"just come and get it"—is, in certain parts of central London, £6 14.0 a ton, if you can get it. Coal in the same areas is being delivered at £7.7.0 a ton.

Very shortly the Government will be pushing through a Clean Air Bill, making coke and other smokeless fuels compulsory in vast areas of central London. Then the chimney sweeps will not be enough to go round. Yet it will be an offence for a factory to have a belching chimney in those areas and it is already a condition of tenancy on some council estates for householders to use smokeless fuel, which is much more expensive. When the Bill is passed, the condition will be imposed on all domestic premises.

Convincing her employers that she was independent in casting a film.

Having spotted the talents of Diane Cilento a year ago, when she was no more than a small part actress, we have great confidence in her on both counts. It is possible that she may be the thin edge of a wedge. After Passage Home we may well envisage films with two women—or even three. There may even be regular employment for actresses in British studios after this. To what further excesses our producers' search for novelty will lead we shudder to think.
